III. Articles in journals and from electronic databases

Loyola subscribes to over 120 electronic information services. Many of them have abstracts, and some of them also contain the full text of articles. To use them, open a web browser, go to the library’s Databases by Subject page. Select Academic Search Complete under Frequently Used.

- Type in your topic, then click on Search.
- Mark records that interest you.
- Click on Folder has items.
- Email the citations, abstracts, or articles to yourself.

Look for the Get it button for additional services for that article, including full text.

IV. Use Get it for full text and other services

If the article says it has full text, just click on that link. If not, look for the Get it button.

Click on Get it for a new menu of services. If there is any full text, that will be at the top.

If there is no text, try our catalog to see if we have the journal in print.

Also use ILLiad to request your article. You must register before using ILLiad.
V. Use RefWorks

RefWorks is a web-based citation manager. It keeps track of your citations and can produce footnotes, endnotes and bibliographies. Many databases can send citations directly to RefWorks so you don’t have to type in information. You must sign up for an account to use the service. To use it, open a web browser, go to the library’s Databases by Subject page. Click on RefWorks under Frequently Used.
